

The Last Kiss: Saying Goodbye to my son

The Last Kiss. Saying Goodbye: Thoughts Of A Doctor/Mom After The Death Of Her Son. Powerless over death. We hear phrases like, I would drown saving my child. I would die saving my child. All of my medical training and education could not save my own child's life. It is difficult to not feel like a failure. I did not swim fast enough to save my son. No man is an island; we are all a part of the main. Death and grief changes who we are. I told my daughter, I will never be the woman that I was before Rawlin died. My daughter now had two mothers: the mother she knew before Rawlin died and the mother she lives with now after he died.
